September 11, 2012

Religion, Rhetoric, and American Politics: Continuity and Change, 1933-2012

KEVIN COE, Assistant Professor, Department of Communication
The University of Arizona

Kevin Coe is an Assistant Professor of Communication whose research and teaching focus is on the interaction of American political discourse, news media, and public opinion. He is coauthor (with David Domke) of the award-winning book, The God Strategy: How Religion Became a Political Weapon in America (Oxford, 2010), which documents the increasingly partisan tenor of the religious rhetoric used in American politics. His work has included an examination of religious rhetoric in the wake of 9/11/01.

October 30, 2012

Christian Coalitions in American Politics: Conservative Evangelicals and their Alliances with Catholics and Mormons

KAREN SEAT, Associate Professor, Religious Studies Program,
The University of Arizona

Karen Seat, Associate Professor of Religious Studies, specializes in the history of American evangelicalism. With a grant from the University of Arizona’s Confluence Center for Creative Inquiry (2011-2012), Professor Seat has traveled the country interviewing politically active conservative evangelicals as they have been gearing up for the 2012 presidential election. Professor Seat will discuss conservative evangelicals’ engagement with politics in American history, with a particular focus on the complex relationship they have had with Catholics and Mormons in building political alliances.

SAVE THE DATES!
SPRING ISRC LECTURE SERIES - February 13 & March 19, 2013

For more information contact
The Religious Studies Program
626-5152 or http://religious.arizona.edu

Sponsoring Units
The Arizona Center for Judaic Studies
The Division for Late Medieval and Reformation Studies
The Religious Studies Program